Annotated Bibliography

This article studies the amount of videos available on YouTube that contain certain tobacco brand images or words. It is eventually determined that there are a large number of tobacco related images on YouTube. In addition to providing this information, this article provides possible solutions to removing such harmful images from the internet, which is helpful in supporting my thesis.

Lange argues that under the right circumstances, ranting helps construct an emotional public sphere that generates discussion among similarly concerned YouTube participants about their online communicative rights and privileges. It is interesting how she focuses on the perception of ranters versus “haters” on YouTube. This article provides me with a different perspective on why people speak negatively on the internet.

This article focuses on how new internet technologies like YouTube can bring along different types of digital storytelling in the new generation. It also discusses examples of how YouTube can be used in the classroom which I find very interesting.
